What is an Endoscopy?

An endoscopy is the study of your esophagus (throat) and stomach using a flexible, fiberoptic tube called an endoscopy. This allows your physician to examine the lining of your esophagus for any abnormalities such as inflamed tissue, ulcers or bleeding. If necessary, the physician may perform a biopsy (a small sample of tissue that can be examined under the microscope.)

Written Consent is required from the patient or from the legal guardian prior to this procedure. Legal guardians may obtain the appropriate forms by calling the facility that will be performing your procedure.
